HEREBY DECREES

Art. 1 – Number of research grants/positions available

A public competition for the assignment of n. 1 grant for the carrying out of research activities (hereinafter the “research grant”) at the University of Gastronomic Sciences.

Art. 2 – Research project

- Title of the research project: PRIME - Innovative processes and products of green chemistry, with the application code: 333-100, CUP G78D19001150009, funded by the Region of Piedmont under the sector POR FESR 2014/2020 - Bioeconomy technological platform ";

- Description and objectives of the research project:

PRIME aims to study, develop and demonstrate advanced green chemistry processes in biorefineries capable of transforming renewable raw materials and waste available in the Piedmont territory into bioproducts and biomaterials that has functional properties comparable to those existing products on the market or even in to improved products, with significant impact in strategic sectors for regional economic development: agriculture (compostable mulching sheets, biomaterials for agriculture, bio-stimulants, bio-herbicides), textiles (yarns), automotive (painted components and fabrics for vehicle interiors), food (food packaging), cosmetics and nutraceuticals (products for face and body treatment, lotions for animals, and supplements made for topical use and for special medical purposes). Specifically, starting from agro-industrial waste from the Piedmont area (waste oils and sugars) and dedicated crops in marginalized and / or polluted and / or non-competitive areas, biobased building blocks will be obtained (diacids, diols, fatty acids, esters) through highly innovative and low impact chemical and fermentative methods in order to produce biodegradable and compostable bio-polyesters. The new generation biopolymers will be validated through various transformation processes for the realization of applications of industrial interest including the film for the production of sheets for agricultural mulching and barrier films for food packaging.

The project is structured in 7 Work Packages involving 26 research units which include 5 large enterprises, 9 research centers and 12 small-medium enterprises.

- Research activities:

WP6: Prototypes and validation - Task 6.2: Sensory shelf life tests and type 2 mulching.

The sensorial shelf life of fresh food stored in innovative packaging will be assessed, which will be conceived and produced by the other partners of the project starting from the bioplastics that will be developed in WP4. In order to determine the shelf life of foods packaged in innovative packaging, two different and complementary sensory approaches will be used:

1) Application of sensory discrimination tests at subsequent storage stages, in order to identify how long the packaged products can be stored without observing significant variations in the sensory attributes of each food tested. These sensory tests will be conducted with well-trained tasters.

2) Applications of affective tests at subsequent storage stages, in order to understand how long each packaged food tested can be stored before the sensory changes make it unacceptable (survival analysis). These tests will be conducted with consumers.

The biodegradable mulch sheets obtained in task 5.1 will be evaluated. dealing with i) comparing different agroecological practices for the management of spontaneous plants (wild plants) in organic agriculture and ii) assessing the effect of mulching on open field horticultural plants using innovative bioplastic sheeting as far as agronomic, qualitative, ecological and economic aspects are concerned. The objective of the open field test is to evaluate the effect of mulching applied to the rows of 3 spring-summer horticultural species for the management of spontaneous plants in two locations in the Province of Cuneo (Pollenzo and Fossano) to compare performance with other monitoring systems of wild herbs. 8 treatments are tested for each crop in comparison: polyethylene, black geotextile, Novamont bioplastic, bioplastic with new Novamont polymer, mechanical processing, rice straw, almond peel and live mulch. Five batches of each crop per treatment will be arranged following a randomized block design. Each treatment is five meters long by the same row width. Each case will be compared with a homogeneous lot by type of soil, previous crop, other treatments (possible organic fertilization and use of products allowed in organic agriculture), quantity of water supplied with drip irrigation. In order to perform an assessment of the potential of spontaneous plants in the soil and to check the seed bank, a sample of soil is taken before transplanting the crops in the open field which will be germinated in the greenhouse to calculate the Shannon Index for each batch and the potential weed.

WP7: Sustainability and modeling - Task 7.6: Circular economy and systemic design.

Indicators will be identified for monitoring the impact of the project with a view to the circular economy for food, starting from the quantifications developed by the WP partners (LCA, LCC, LCSA, dispersion index of microplastics, flow analysis in view of EcoDesign and industrial symbiosis);

The circularity will be measured starting from the flows of matter and energy involved, in order to provide concreteness and univocal references to the actions pursued. Particular attention will be paid to the impact that the projects will have on the principles that distinguish the Circular Economy for Food: protection of the natural and cultural capital involved in the system; cyclicity that characterizes the designed system (internal / short cycle, long, cascade, pure) with a view to regenerative economy; and the "think in system" adopted, with a view to co-evolving the system and its possible duplication in other territorial contexts.

- Recruitment sector 07/F1 – Food Science and Technology.
- Scientific -Disciplinary sector: AGR/15 – Food Science and Technology.
- Scientific head of the project: Professor. Luisa Torri.
- Foreign language knowledge confirmed during the course of the interview: English.
- Facility where the research activity will take place: University of Gastronomic Sciences.

Art. 3 - Duration, renewal and amount of the research grant

The research grant has an initial duration of one year and may be renewed, upon its expiration, for periods of not less than one year for a maximum of six years.
